

Ipod Accessories

Contributed by Lou Fogelson
Tuesday, 20 June 2006
Last Updated Monday, 31 July 2006

With Apple's release of the iPod Nano and the iPod Video, iPods are becoming more and more popular. They're wonderful little gadgets, but they become even more useful with one of many iPod accessories that can personalize your mp3 player and tailor it to your needs.

One of the most useful iPod accessories is a protective case which protects your iPod's screen and back from scratches and scuffs. An iPod has cases come either in clear or in a number of colors to match your style and personality. Another way to protect and carry your iPod is with an arm band, which makes it easy to rock out to your music while working out at the gym. On the way home, instead of sitting through the chatter of radio DJs in traffic, you can listen to your iPod in your car. Various FM transmitters can allow you to listen to your iPod on your car stereo, and power adapters let you plug in for the long haul. No more screwing around with racks of tapes or CDs in your car in order to listen to your music; now thousands of songs are at your fingertips. These transmitter/power combinations can be the perfect iPod accessory for long commutes or cross-country road trips. Once you make it back to your home or apartment you can drop your iPod into a speaker set and listen to your music at home too. Many speaker combos are compatible with the iPod base station, which charges your iPod and allows you to connect it to your home stereo or television. Of course, the new iPods with video and photo capabilities allow for a whole new host of iPod accessories. A/V cables allow you to share photos directly from your digital camera to your iPod, and allow you to connect your iPod to your television to transport your movies and show them on the big screen. You can even get a wireless remote to incorporate your iPod into your home stereo or theatre, putting thousands of songs, videos, and photos at your fingertips. Other iPod accessories expand the boundaries of what you thought your iPod could do. The Griffin iTalk allows you to take voice and audio recordings with your iPod, making it a handy tool for tasks from leaving yourself audio reminders to dictating letters and documents directly to mp3 files. With the hundreds of iPod accessories on the market, you can quickly turn any iPod into your iPod and have a customized mp3 player to fit all of your needs.